Draw a line between the manuscript image with the corresponding printed word.

Hints: Scribes sometimes developed special ways of forming certain letters. In the examples above, look out for letter a, which occasionally rises above the headline, and letter r, which might be written like the cursive r you learned as a small child.

Abbreviations can make reading words particularly challenging. If you cannot recognize a graph, it might be an abbreviation. Always think, what else could this be? Is this standing in for something or short for something? Hint: is there an abbreviation that looks like an Rx, usually said to stand for recipe or recipere.
